Gang-rape documentary: BBC airs film in UK, rejects India's call for worldwide ban

BUREAU CHIEF

New Delhi: The British Broadcasting Corporation on Thursday morning (IST) telecast the controversial documentary in UK featuring one of the December 16 gang-rape convicts despite Indian government's call to block the film worldwide.

The documentary's broadcast was advanced by the BBC from its original March 8 scheduled date, coinciding with International Women's Day. Meanwhile, the Delhi Police is, reportedly, likely to question Leslee Udwin, the British filmmaker who made documentary and interviewed convict Mukesh Singh in Tihar jail here.

The Home Ministry on Wednesday obtained orders from court to restrain the broadcast of the documentary and promising to investigate how permission was given to interview the rapist. The issue was raised in both houses of parliament, as members across party lines asked the government to stop the telecast of the documentary saying it insulted women.

"Our government condemns the incident of December 16, 2012 in the strongest possible terms and will not allow any attempt by any individual, group or organisation to leverage such unfortunate incidents for commercial benefits," Home Minister Rajnath Singh said in a statement in both houses of Parliament on Wednesday.

"In what condition this order was given I have asked for full information on that. In future, no one will be given permission to interview rapists," the Home Minister said, as both houses saw members protest against the documentary. Rajnath Singh said the permission for the documentary was granted in 2013, adding that the documentary maker violated the conditions on which the permission was granted.

Sushilkumar Shinde, who was the home minister in 2013, however, said he was not responsible for it.

"I had not given any permission to make a documentary on the Nirbhaya case. It was not given by me. I observed the conversation in parliament, Rajnath Singh has not mentioned my name. It must have been given by somebody, I do not know," Shinde told reporters on Wednesday.

Making similar statements in both Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha, the home minister said orders were obtained from court

Making similar statements in both Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha, the home minister said orders were obtained from court

Tuesday night to restrain the broadcast of the documentary. A Delhi court on Wednesday directed continuation of the ban on the telecast of the documentary. Rajnath Singh said he was personally hurt when he got to know about the documentary. "I would like to make it clear. As soon as I got to know about this incident, I was personally hurt. I immediately talked to the concerned authorities and gave instructions that it should not be telecast in any condition, and (restraining) orders were taken from court last night (Tuesday) that whatever has been telecast should not be released," he said.

As the Home Minister promised responsibility will be fixed, official sources said Tihar jail director general Alok Verma met him on Wednesday on the issue. Parliament members across party lines condemned the interview of the December 16 gang rape convict, while some said it reflected the mentality of several other men in society.

"There is a documentary which is so derogatory. It should not be shown," Janata Dal-United leader KC Tyagi said raising the issue in the Rajya Sabha.

Nominated member Javed Akhtar said that while members were angry about the comments made by the convict, he has heard similar comments in the house.

"The anger is why the interview was taken. Is the anger on why he said these things, or the anger is why is it being told to the world? I have heard such things in this house," Akhtar said.

BJP Lok Sabha member Kirron Kher said: "Mentality needs to be changed. They don't consider women as human beings."

Several women activists also raised objections to the documentary calling it unacceptable. "This is totally unacceptable. We have to draw an ethical boundary. I do not understand why they are doing it (airing the interview)," women's rights activist Ranjana Kumari told reporters.

Delhi Commission for Women chairperson Barkha Singh said: "This defames the nation. How could they be given permission for interview?"

The documentary "India's daughter" by British filmmaker Leslee Udwin has kicked up a storm over the interview of one of the six men who raped the 23-year-old trainee physiotherapist on December 16, 2012 on board a moving bus in Delhi.

SPECIAL EDITORIAL / MUKESH PANDEY

BBC served legal notice for telecasting banned 16/12 film which is on rape

BBC was served a legal notice for broadcasting the banned documentary film which was on the gang rape of a paramedical student in Delhi. The name was India's Daughter. Alok Verma director general of Tihar Jail gave the notice to BBC before it telecasted Leslee Udwin's telefilm. He said BBC has become liable for legal action.

It is to be seen that Home ministry also took it very seriously and said "No final approval was taken by the BBC for commercial use of the documentary and we are waiting for a response."

Legal notice consisting of five pages said, it was agreed by Udwin not to use it for commercial purposes but he sold it to the BBC and for this she did not take permission of the jail authorities.

The banned had failed as video of the movie went viral. As it is Videos crop up on You Tube and rakes thousands of views. The notice send by our Government is justified as the image of our country will be tarnished. People, tourist etc would become cautious about their safety.

Those viewing it may think that our Government is total failure and people are not civilized and Police is also a failure and India is still in much backward in time and is yet to civilize and respect Human value. Rapes take place in all the countries but less and we don't like to be depicted as a Barbarian Country.

Airtel to double 4G network by next fiscal: Sunil Mittal

BS BUREAU

Barcelona: Flush with an investment outlay of USD 3 billion a year on networks, telecom major Bharti Airtel plans to double its 4G network by next fiscal as it gears up to take on competition, including the much-awaited foray of Mukesh Ambani-led Reliance Industries group.

"We have decided to roll out (4G). We have 20,000 base station now, in March, and we will be doing another 20,000 next year," Bharti Airtel Chairman Sunil Mittal said here. Mittal said funds would not be a constraint for the company's expansion plans as it is spending USD 3 billion every year on networks alone, excluding spectrum, and its 2G and 3G roll-outs are among the most expensive in the country.

The company will be rolling out mobile tower sites to use its 20 MHz broadband wireless access spectrum, which Mittal said is "life saving" as 3G networks are now choking up in metros and tier 1 cities.

Companies, including Airtel, at present have only 5 MHz of 3G spectrum in select parts of country and the government has put another 5 MHz block of 3G spectrum in the ongoing auction. Speaking on the sidelines of recently held Mobile World Congress, Mittal said Airtel, through its newly inked partnership with China Mobile, will try to bring down price of the smartphones that can support all networks, to below Rs 6,000 apiece in a year to push usage of networks.

"In my view, in 12 months time you will have USD 100 smartphones. You already have USD 100 smartphones. What I am saying is it should be multi-mode, multi-band. Customer says give me good speed, good quality network so if he drops from 4G, he must connect to 3G and if he drops from 3G he must connect to 2G," Mittal said.

He said the partnership with China Mobile gives Airtel an "economy of scale" and it will be able to lower its capital expenditure significantly. Mittal said driving down cost of equipments, devices, setting up standards for next generation technology like 5G and exchange of best practices are main objectives of this partnership without any equity transaction.

"Funding is not a constraint. Every year we are spending USD 3 billion into networks other than spectrum. Our roll-outs of 3G, 2G are the most expensive roll-out in the country," he said. On the growth potential of 4G networks in the country, Mittal said Airtel and Reliance Jio Infocomm put together will be 10 per cent of China Mobile's 4G network by 2015-16.

"China Mobile has rolled out being doing 1 billion by end of this year. It will be single largest deployment of TD LTE (4G) network by any operator in the world.
